

Essay on Indian Festivals :

Essay On Indian Festivals: we all know that India is rich in its Culture and Heritage. People of all the communities and traditions survive in this country. India is a diverse land with numerous festivals. They celebrate festivals with huge glory and excitement. Festivals are celebrations of life. Many festivals occur now and then, they will aid in putting a break from the monotony of life. The tiny and the huge pleasure of life is celebrated in festivals. Celebration of festivals will be performed to continue the traditions and customs. Every nation in the world celebrates its own cultural and religious festivals. Moreover, India is the only country that celebrates a vast number of festivals.

India is a country with diverse religions and cultures. Each religion has its ethics and beliefs. They celebrate the festival according to their customs and traditions. Based on this the festivals can be sectioned into three categories, they are National Festivals, Religious Festivals, and the Seasonal Festivals.

Categories of Festivals In India

National Festivals are celebrated to respect and commemorate the highly regarded personalities of India and the events. Religious Festivals are celebrated based on their religions, faith, and belief of people towards their cultures and traditions. Seasonal Festivals are all about the celebration that takes place with each season, that they differ from one region to another region.

National Festivals in India

The National Festivals of India are Independence day, Republic Day, and Gandhi Jayanti. People celebrate this festival with honor and patriotism towards the motherland. The inhabitants of the country celebrate this festival irrespective of their caste, creed, religion, cultures, gender, language, etc., There may be many differences among the citizens of the country, but the love towards the nation will bring them together. Everybody celebrates these festivals. These days are declared as National Holidays.

These festivals are celebrated with unity among the individuals. The flag is hoisted on these festival days. People show their devotion to their nation, by hoisting flags. The Capital of India is Delhi. The Flag is hoisted in New Delhi by the Prime Minister and the President. The Parade will be performed on these days.

Religious Festivals in India

The festivals are celebrated all over the world as per their faith and beliefs in their customs and traditions. There are many religious festivals celebrated in India. The festivals are Navratri, Diwali, Holi, Ganesh Chaturthi, Dusshera, Christmas, Eid-ul-Fitr, Guru Nanak Jayanti, Raksha Bandhan, etc., These are the prominent festivals celebrated with a lot of delight and enthusiasm.

Seasonal Festivals in India

Some festivals vary from one region to the other region in the country. These festivals are referred to as seasonal festivals. Pongal is celebrated in Tamil Nadu, Bihu is celebrated in Assam, Sankranti is celebrated in Andhra Pradesh, Basant Panchami is celebrated in West Bengal and North India.

Each festival has its significance and prominence. Diverse people and various cultures in the country make our country different from all the other nations in the world.

Significance of Festivals

National festivals play a vital role in uniting all the people together, people from various cultures and religions come as one to celebrate this festival. They show their respect towards the nation. This will enhance the unity of diversity principles in people. The inhabitants show their gratitude towards each other.

Religious festivals depict the values and cultures of people. Their spirit and faith in the deity lead towards fulfilling their desires and ambitions. They believe in it and carry it throughout their lives. People with a lot of bliss celebrate the festivals, they clean and whitewash their houses, and decorate their houses with lights and colors.

Seasonal Festivals are based on regional beliefs and traditions. People follow these factors since their origin, this shows their dedication and love towards their region.

Festivals bring all the people together, letting all their worries and tensions apart. They enjoy the festivals forgetting their routine days.